

Today, I want to speak with you about coronavirus
and what it means for you and your family.

While changes need to be made now
this is not how we will live forever.

Our children
will return to school.

People
will return to work.

We will gather
at the places of worship,
concerts,
and sporting events again.

I urge you
to stay connected to family and loved ones
through the video chats,
phone calls,
social media,
and other safe technologies.

Please be sure to follow
the guidelines
which can be found at coronavirus.gov
or cdc.gov
along with other information and resources.

Stay safe
and remember
while many of us are apart
we are all in this together.

Money is a widely accepted form of currency.

It's a beautiful thing when people can come together and accept money from each other, I just love it.

I'm always wondering,
in a situation like this,
when we all gather together

not at a friend's apartment,
gather through the video chats,
phone calls,
social media,
and other safe technologies.

How much money there is among us.

$200
million?
$269 dollars?

How much money is in your bank account?

How many of us by a show of hands have loose coins in our pockets?

Please be silent so that we can count precise dollar, pound, euro, and other currency amounts and attribute a sum to each individual.

Pick your poison:
No more peace and quiet for the wordless.

(1) Products.
Grain market with its various subdivisions. E.g. seed market: rice, sago, potatoes etc. This very important economically; at the same time market for production and for direct consumption.
(2) Colonial-produce market. Coffee, tea, cocoa, sugar; spices (pepper, tobacco, pimento, cinnamon, cassia, pinea, cloves, ginger, mace, nutmeg, etc.).
(3) Fruits. Almonds, currants, figs, plums, prunes, raisins, oranges, lemons etc. Molasses (for production etc.).
(4) Provisions. Butter; cheese; bacon; hams; lard; pork; beef (smoked), fish etc.
(5) Spirits. Wine, rum, beer etc.

(1) Raw Materials.
(1) Raw materials for mechanical industry. Flax; hemp; cotton; silk; wool; hides; leather; gutta-percha etc.
(2) Raw materials for chemical industry. Potash, saltpetre; turpentine; nitrate of soda etc.

(2) Raw materials which at the same time instruments of production.
Metals (copper, iron, tin, zinc, lead, steel etc.), wood. Lumber. Timber. Bye-woods. Specialized wood for shipbuilding etc. Accessory means of production and raw materials. Drugs and dyes. (Sochi-nual, indigo etc.). Tar. Tallow. Oil. Coals etc.)
Of course, every product must go to market, but really great markets, as distinct from retail trade, are formed only by the great consumption goods (economically important are only the grain market, the tea, the sugar, the coffee market (wine market to some extent, and market in spirits generally), or those which are raw materials of industry: wool, silk, wood, metal market etc.)
(to be seen at what point the abstract category of the market has to be brought in.)
